Joke Caimo (born 1987, Leuven) is an undisciplined activist, media artist, and inventor of objects and instruments. Their work lies at the intersection of performance, music, product design, installation, and the digital world. With their objects and instruments, they explore “the collective” versus “the inner self,” inviting the viewer to become part of their work.

Joke develops measuring instruments and platforms that help us better understand unconscious patterns and mechanisms in co-creation processes. The underlying theme is investigating, stimulating, and visualizing the energies between people as a collective.

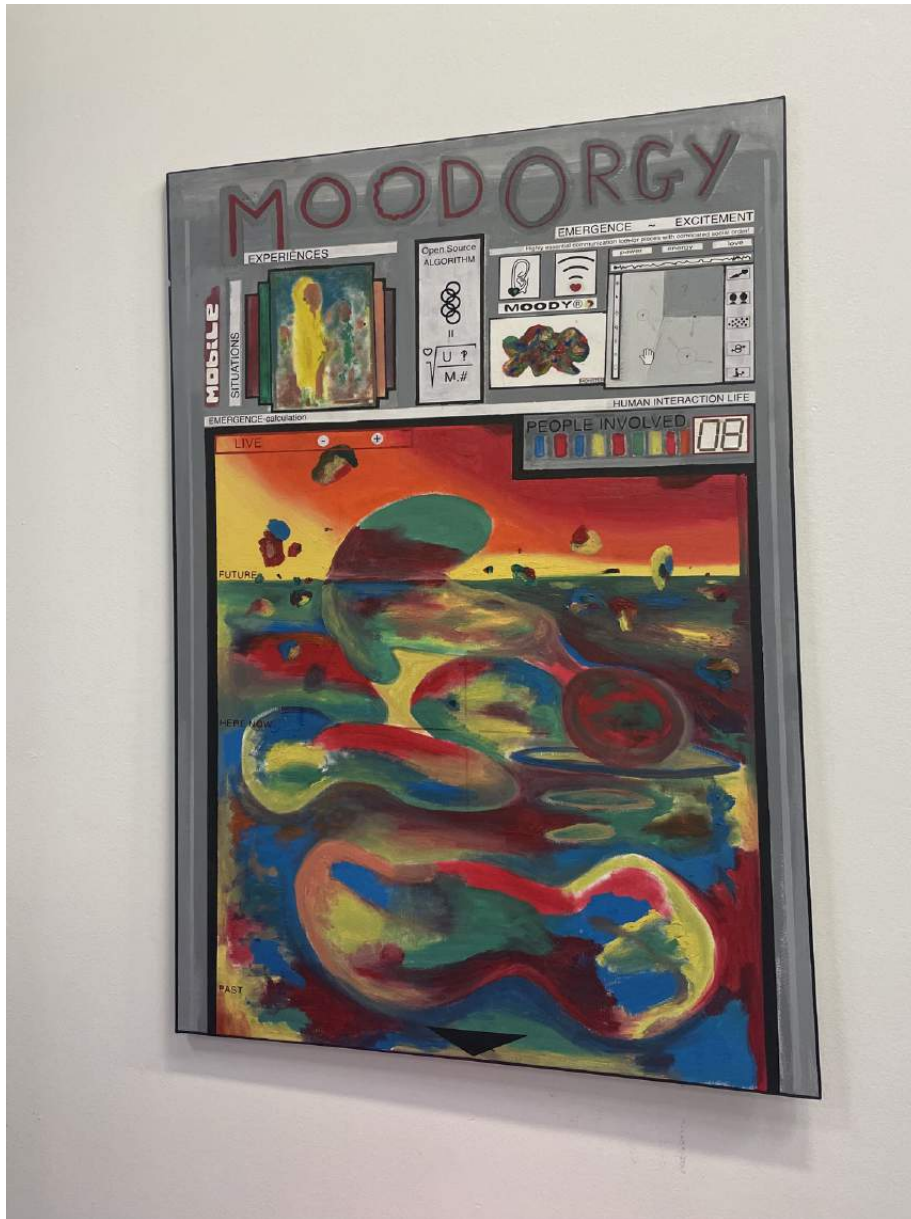

Additionally, Joke Caimo is a co-initiator of Samenschool and hosts their own residency and workspace for artists, friends, and neighbors.

MOODY® -product-photo, 2018

The public, participates by wearing a device that measures their excitements together with the distances between them. The energies between the people is shown. A laboratory environment in which a participant participates and also researches, shows the research: playful interactions with people and things, live colorful multi-dimensional graphs, personal evaluation prints, ... Can we learn more about social interactions from this? Can we view our self as a rhizome from a distance? The body, its relations and exchange with other bodies and the context open a framework where technology serves as a canvas to paint our emotions.

Red Ears Measurer

Social Excitement Behaviour Communication Tool
(SEBCT)

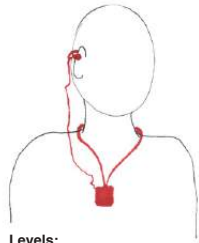

Sketch of people wearing the SEBCT's, 2014

The Red Ears Measurer is a highly essential communication tool for spaces with complicated social order. The device continuously measures the temperature of your ear and calculates the amount of excitement. It shows this by means of a color changing LED. The scale goes from blue (calm) to red (passionate).

Selected installation performances:
'Neo-Dada', Venice Biennial, 2015
'Het Testen van de Nieuwe Warmte, Multiple Happening', LIIIIm3, Antwerp, 2015
'Virus', Groupshow, Netwerk, Aalst, 2014
Installation made possible by
Netwerk in Aalst and Imal in Brussels.

The Red Ears Mesurer or Social Excitement Behavior Communication Tool is a device used to measure an emotional state. The ear-clip changes color when a temperature change of your ear is detected due to excitement.

User Manual:

1. Carry the motherboard by putting on the necklace

2. Attach the clip to the ear lobe.

3. Switch on the motherboard by moving the switch downwards.

Try to forget you carry the motherboard and make sure it is not visible for you.

The tool is rechargeable by the white plug. Required accessories are added: adapter + micro-USB cable.

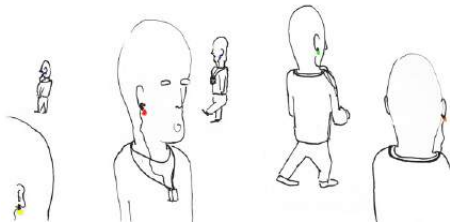

Highly essential communication tool for spaces with complicated social order.

Warning!

For user:
Don't try to trigger excitement consciously, because it's not possible. Honesty is not to be faked.

For observers:
Do not take the interpretations too seriously:

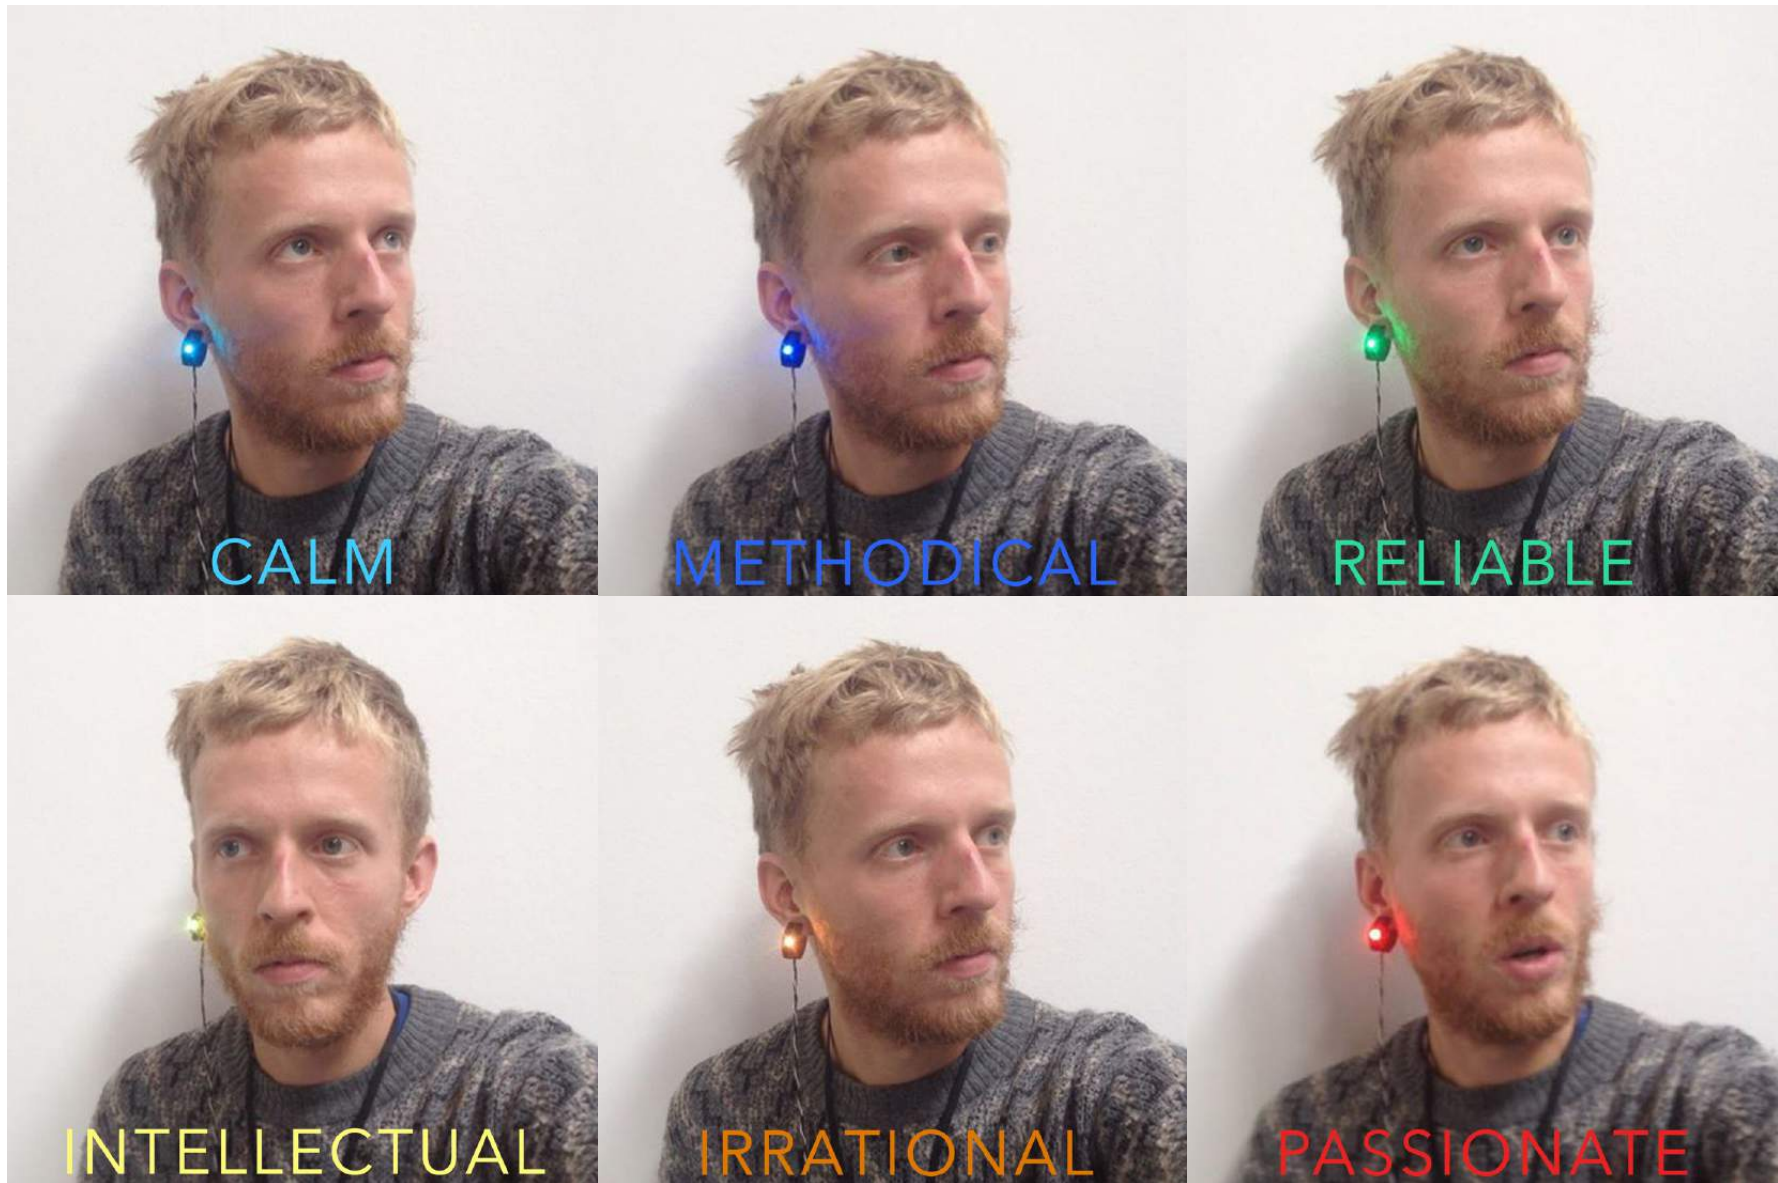

- One should not forget the human right to lie whenever he wants.
- Your own interpretation can cause false fantasies or an image that is not shared by everyone.

The Documentary of the bluetooth

Exploring the stomach with a bluetoothcall, sketch - A4-sheet - 2012

InnerRhythms - Exploring the stomach with a bluetoothcall is a performance where I swallow a Bluetooth headset. With precautions; without the ear and in 2 finger condoms, I swallow the Bluetooth. This is connected to my smartphone. The audience could hear the InnerRhythms via skype in the exhibition space or by calling me. Meanwhile, I would have an ordinary day. Of this I made a documentary by swallowing a camera after swallowing the bluetooth: The documentary of the bluetooth.

Human Organ Concerto

Human Organ Concerto - installation view + ongoing participation - Spell & Promises - Grouperexpo in the Creative Factory in Turnhout (BE), 2024 - foto's - Lina Van Hulle

Human Organ Concerto is an interactive audio-visual installation that invites the audience to 'perform' the piece. The organ's sound is controlled by the participants' breathing patterns, which are captured through wireless devices. These devices translate each breath into four electric pulses, triggering different tones on a pipe organ.

See work Human Organ Concerto - developed in 2017

Human Organ Concerto at 'de Biënnale van België', In De Ruimte, Gent, 2017

Human Organ Concerto is an audio-visual installation that has to be 'performed' by the audience. An organ is being controlled by the rhythm of breathing of maximum 10 people. They breath through a wireless device that translates their breath into 4 electric pulses, which is connected to 4 different tones of an (pipe) organ.

Selected installation performances:

HumanRespirationMusic

Two mini-fans, placed in a mask that divides the air through both nose and mouth, rotate faster or slower during the inhaling and exhaling.

Two analog electronic components - made in collaboration with Kris Delacourt - convert the speed of the fans into two mono sounds: the music of the nose and the music of the mouth.

Two walkie-talkies together with the electronic components on a belt broadcast the sounds. They allow you to walk freely and to create a distance between the breathing and the music. Since the music can be heard in another space by two receiving walkie-talkies.

Composition for # pendejos with # megaphones (and # walkie talkies) in # spaces with # transport-possibilities.

Score, Central Station, Antwerp, 2014

Het Megaphone-ENSEMBLE is een radicale herinterpretatie van de fanfare: fluïde in samenstelling, open in vorm, en subversief in context. Elke deelnemer fungeert als zowel stem als echo, improviserend en communicerend via versterkte gebaren en bewegingen. De aanwezigheid van het ensemble is transformerend; megafoons bewegen vrij rond, herscheppen het klanklandschap en herconfigureren machtsdynamieken in real-time. Deze mobiele resonantie daagt de grenzen van ruimte uit en nodigt elke bezoeker uit om een steeds veranderende sonische en sociale werkelijkheid te ervaren, uniek voor hun positie binnen het collectief.

Performance Quartair, The Hague, Photo by Ed Jansen, 2016

Koorvorming is an installation that becomes a collective performance by the audience. All attendees sing while everyone holds a speaker on one ear, one earpiece in the other ear and a blindfold around the head. Through the loudspeaker you hear my voice giving you instructions to sing along. After singing, everyone gets a CD with the ready-made recording of your voice together with the other voices. The choir can consist of up to 90 people. It is not necessary to sing in harmony or in the rhythm.

Flowerpower

Jacket made by Jesus Eloy for me to wear during the happening, 2019

Passers-by and the public are invited to participate in an experience to plant the “Flowerpower”, a collective energy that comes from coming together, singing and improvising. The Flowerpower movement shows and stimulates current and emerging energies. The mobile installation is equipped with a large flower figure (hanging above our head) where 30 flowers (the halves of plastic yoga balls) with pistils (small speakers) hang. 30 people participate in this “attraction” by wearing these flower buds. In the middle there are 15 flower microphones that pick up all the voices of the participants and influence “positively”. During the experience you can hear the other voices through the loudspeakers, with slightly changing volumes, along with improvisation suggestions, eg: Feel the connection with the other flower spirits, Repeat what you just heard, Go higher / faster, Give more space the other flower spirits, Improvise by listening / move by looking, ... Planting a traveling attraction for the Flowerpower in a shared temporary space with all types of people in places.

My name is Jo Caimo, I am a pataphycisist.
I am searching for volunteers to give their head on the science sake?
Our ecological footprint is too big!
Our body is not necessary.
About my research:
I want to place the head on a plant.
The scientific issues are:
What plant do we use?
Which technology do we use to connect the head with the plant?
And how are we gone communicate in the future?

A performance in an installation by 3 people that improvise with each other, in an atmospheric, 'neutral space'. Dance, music and video reinforce each other and find their moment of interaction. The balance between performing and being. In a mirrored space, audio and visual recordings are projected and reused. There is a world created: this is all that exists. The viewer is confronted with a creation that seems to stand by itself, a free and private world in which he can roam freely.
